

NORDICA IN A 'VENICE' TRIUMPH
 She Is Acclaimed in a Tour a La Cleopatra Through Duss's "Venice in New York" at the Garden.

HIGH NOTES BUMP THE ROOF.
 Chorus, in Pretty Set Scenes, is Also Heard to Advantage, but Maestro from Economy Doesn't Succeed as Well with Orchestra.

Mme. Nordica had a new experience at Madison Square Garden. She was "shown off" much after the fashion of Barnums—now faded—$10,000 beauty. After she had sung the Inflammatus from "Stabat Mater" and then stirred the national spirit with a red-white-and-blue song she was piked around the "Grand Canal" of "Venice in New York" in a gondola.
 Cleopatra in her barge could scarcely have received greater homage from the populace than was paid the chief advertising card of the spectacular Mr. Duss's scheme of summer concerts.
 Spectators scrambled to their feet and rushed eagerly to the edge of the canal to gain a close view of the dazzling diva. She, gracious creature, flashed her smiles and her jewels at them with the brilliant impartiality of a ship's searchlight.

Crowned the Evening.
 And thus it happened that Nordica's triumphal return to her dressing-room was the crowning feature of the evening.

Mr. Duss also arrived by water, but big-bearded Edouard De Reszke—possibly from fear that his weight might sink a gondola—contented himself by taking a short cut overland to the stage, where he sang "The Palms" vigorously and responded to two encores. The stalwart basso was kept bowing right and left as he made his way to the platform, where he was received by the maestro from Economy, Pa., with a hysterical handshake and an assuring slap on the back.

De Reszke coped successfully with the acoustics of the cavernous place, and Nordica exultantly hit the roof with her high notes. The chorus was heard to good effect, especially in the Hallelujah chorus from Handel's "Messiah." The Metropolitan Opera-House orchestra did not always fare so well, the delicate passages of the numbers being at times all but lost in space.

Mr. Duss conducted in his customary self-conscious style and introduced one piece, reminiscent of a baseball pitcher getting ready to put a twister over the plate.

He drove his men to a murderous assault upon "The Beautiful Blue Danube" waltz. The piece was distorted by a jerky reading which robbed it completely of the rhythm which is the chief charm of Strauss.

But while Duss, as a conductor, may betray characteristics of the leader of a village "cornet band," he deserves credit for having caused the Garden to be transformed into a pretty, picturesque place, and, judging by the mammoth audience which attended the opening, his circus methods in music seem likely to meet with success in novelty-loving New York.

The Terrace Garden summer season was auspiciously opened Saturday evening when Offenbach's opera bouffe "The Brigands" was sung and acted with a fair measure of success. Harry Luckstone, as the brigand chief, and George Tallman, as the Duke of Mantua, sang well, but the women principals, Flavia Arcaro, Marion Field and Lillian Sefton, were not, vocally, all that might have been wished. The chorus, for the most part young and animated, was praiseworthy. As soon as an act was over the orchestra would hustle out into the palm garden and play assorted airs while the Wurzburger flowed.

BIG MAN ENDS HIS LIFE IN CITY PARK.
 Loungers Watch Him for Two Hours Before He Puts Bullet in His Brain.

Tompkins Park, which is popular in summer with east side suicides, opened its annual season with a dramatic termination of a discouraged life.
 Morris Wax, of No. 329 Eighth street, and Charles Young, of No. 108 Bowers, with others, were sitting in the park early watching a mentally perturbed man who walked up and down the paths muttering to himself and occasionally moaning. He had done this for two days when, without further warning, he drew a revolver and quickly sent a bullet into his brain. He died almost instantly.

The suicide was about fifty years old and although not more than five feet in height was of such stout build that he weighed fully 230 pounds. He had dark hair, black mustache and goatee. He wore a dark suit of clothes, a blue and white striped shirt, gaiters, black derby hat and gray socks. There was a scar on his forehead. He had no money nor any papers by which he could be identified.

RETURNS TO HIS OLD POST.
 Copeland Townsend Again in Charge at the Hotel Majestic.
 Copeland Townsend returned to-day to his old position as manager of the Hotel Majestic. Some time ago Mr. Townsend left the Majestic with the intention of conducting a hotel enterprise in California, but abandoned the project and has lately been connected with the Fifth Avenue Hotel.
 Mr. Townsend's return is heartily welcomed by the Majestic's patrons, with whom he was exceedingly popular during his former connection with the house.

A Vast Treasury of Bargain Riches.

JEWELS of Merchandise for this splendidly planned Jubilee! Wealths of merchandise from practically every clime. Thousands of the most remarkable bargains. There is nothing conventional, nothing trite or hackneyed about this annual event. It springs into the forefront of publicity, eager for attention and brimming with radiant attractiveness. One of those huge special occasions to which thousands of women delight to flock, for the bargains are as plentiful as apple blossoms in June. Plenty of everything, and everything new, fresh and best. The whole Store, moved as if by some giant hand, responded with enthusiastic fervor to the exigencies of the occasion when the Don't forget to ask for "Sperry & Hutchinson" Green Trading Stamps.

doors opened to waiting throngs this morning. Last year's Jubilee was a peerless success. This year's shall mark new records, for the Jubilee features at wonderfully low prices precisely what the people want—what they want NOW and during the Summer weeks to come. Not one but every one of the 75 Stores under the Siegel Cooper roof swings, hand in hand, so to speak, into line to vie with each other in phenomenal value-giving. The bargain hints that follow but shadowily hint of the thousands of bargains that to-day are denied representation in the newspapers.
